

Safer Horse Rescues

Emergency Services Protocol For dealing with Incidents involving Equines

What is the Emergency Services Protocol?

- A set of general operating procedures for responding to emergency incidents involving horses.
- A guide to decision making at the control centre and at the scene.
- A means of protecting human life and preventing injury to members of the public and Emergency Services personnel.

What does this mean for the emergency services?

If a horse is injured, or thought to be injured, a veterinary surgeon, ideally an Equine Veterinary Surgeon from the British Equine Veterinary Association (BEVA) Directory of Equine Veterinary Practices, MUST be summoned unless a Veterinary Surgeon is already in attendance or en route. (The Directory of Equine Practices is appended in the back of this leaflet.)

Vets from the BEVA Directory will work under the Incident Commander and can support the rescue team in the following ways:

- By providing welfare advice.
- Administering sedation/anaesthesia to facilitate animal and human safety.
- Stabilising an injured animal.
- Humanely destroying a severely injured animal.

Even if the horse has no apparent injuries, we recommend a vet examines it to determine its overall condition and check for less obvious injuries.

EQUINE RESCUE
FUND

The absence of an animal's owner should not preclude the immediate attendance of a vet. In the event that the owner is untraceable, the costs of attendance, initial treatment, and if necessary euthanasia, plus transport to a more appropriate premises for further treatment will be reimbursed from the Equine Rescue Fund administered by BEVA provided all reasonable efforts to recover the costs, including debt recovery, have been exhausted.

The emergency services should NOT incur any costs for calling out a vet from the Directory of Equine Veterinary Practices. Funding enquiries should be directed to BEVA Tel. 01638 723555.

Process for emergency services control rooms

When a report of an incident involving a horse is received, the call centre should make an initial assessment from the information provided as to whether the incident could potentially endanger the health and safety of humans as well as any animals involved.

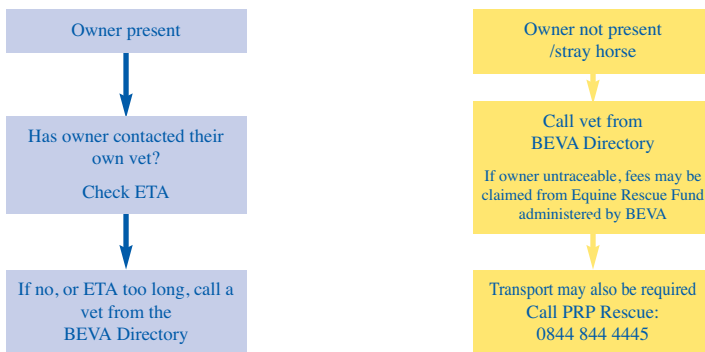

The following information should be requested:

- The nature of the incident.
- The precise location.
- Are humans trapped or in close proximity to the horse?
- Is the horse in water: i.e. a river, pond or lake?
- Is the owner present?
- Is a vet already on site, or has one been called, and what is their estimated time of arrival?
- Is the incident accessible by road vehicle?

Once the details of the incident are established, please follow the step-by-step process below for obtaining veterinary assistance and if required, horse transportation.

AN INJURED HORSE WILL REQUIRE IMMEDIATE VETERINARY ATTENTION

If a horse is trapped, but seems otherwise healthy, we recommend a vet should still be called to assess the condition of the horse and administer sedation to help make the rescue safer for all concerned.

The RSPCA National Control Centre should also be contacted so that an inspector/officer can be dispatched if necessary.

At the scene

Please note that the following does not contain detailed advice on standard operating procedures for rescuing horses. Rescues of this nature should only be performed by animal rescue teams trained in rescue techniques.

Initial emergency responders should carry out a risk assessment to first determine the human risk, followed by the welfare of the animal involved.

If initial responders are not trained in animal rescue, their responsibility will be to safeguard the scene, carry out immediate measures to protect lives, and call for assistance.

Horses in distress – what you need to know

Horses have a strong herd instinct and an unpredictable flight or fight reaction to unpleasant situations. The most placid horse can be very dangerous when panicked or stressed and therefore potentially dangerous to itself and those endeavouring to rescue it. A veterinary surgeon can administer sedation or anaesthesia to calm the horse and make the rescue scene safer. However...

Be warned: even sedated horses can kick and cause injury.

The Emergency Services should approach any incident with sirens turned off to prevent startling the horse.

If there is more than one horse, they will be calmer if they can be kept together.

THE THREE GOLDEN RULES OF HORSE RESCUE

- Always put a head collar on the horse before you attempt to rescue it.
- Never release a horse unless you have somewhere safe for it to go.
- Plan your exit route. Always have a safe egress.

The importance of training

Only 20% of a safe and effective animal rescue is about equipment. The other 80% is about understanding animal psychology and behaviour, and knowing how to apply basic rescue techniques.

Following the establishment of the Animal Rescue Practitioner Group, supported by the Chief Fire Officers Association (CFOA) suggested national standards in animal rescue training and mechanisms for delivering that training are being rolled out across the UK.

Hampshire Fire and Rescue Service provide BEVA accredited courses for the fire and rescue service, including Train the Trainer courses (AR3), which provide animal rescue teams with specialist skills. For further information telephone 023 8062 6812 or visit www.hantsfire.gov.uk/animalrescue.

Horse Transportation

It may be necessary to move a horse to another location, whether this is an equine hospital for further treatment, or simply to clear them from the public highway in order to prevent them endangering themselves and members of the public.

PRP Rescue Services has a nationwide network of DEFRA-registered transporters offering 24-hour emergency transport and temporary stabling. Call 0844 844 4445.

Horse Welfare

The RSPCA National Control Centre may dispatch an inspector/officer to support the emergency services at rescues. This assistance may take the form of liaison with the public/horse owner over welfare concerns and the necessity to contact the fire and rescue service/veterinary assistance, and liaison with the police over euthanasia.

Call 0300 1234 999

The RSPCA operates a national Initial Emergency Treatment fund to contribute to the cost of relieving suffering of animals which are not owned. Additional local funds may also be available.

Below and overleaf (page 4) are lists of individuals and associations that may be able to provide horse handling support to the emergency services, and in some cases, temporary sanctuary to horses.

However, please note they are not in themselves an emergency service and cannot guarantee to provide 24-hour emergency cover.

BEVA Directory of Equine Veterinary Practices (July 2009)

The following is a Directory of Equine Veterinary Practices, listed by county, who should be contacted to assist the emergency services in incidents involving horses. These practices are able to make a claim for their fees through the Equine Rescue Fund, administered by BEVA, in the event that the horse owner cannot be traced. We hope this will eliminate delays in requesting veterinary treatment or euthanasia for an injured horse.

* Some practices are highlighted. This means one or more of their vets has completed BEVA's two-day Rescue and Emergency Medicine Training in association with Hampshire Fire and Rescue Service.
